About - Hidden Humanity

To reveal what is hidden in man, but also that which is eternal, this is the ambition of David Lopez. His work invites us to discover, beyond appearance that which we see lost and yet endures within us, that which death will not be able to snatch from us. Beginning with the figures taken from the Great Masters of painting and cinematography, David Lopez has penetrate a familiar world, where the memories of these icons of eastern art and those from the intimacy of his family are superimposed, traveling therefore from the universal to the particular.

As the contemporary artist Pistoletto says: "The good use of liberty consist in putting things in equilibrium, in harmony. I insist that the foundation of art is its capacity to encourage the equilibrium between the individual and the collective or social; between the great universal forms and the small singular expressions. Art is, above all, relationship".

About these thoughts, the universal cross, that of Christ, launches us into the world of the sacred, of question marks in front of death. It is he, in the form of executed bodies, which we find hidden in each work, projected as light upon each one of the figures.

The spectator is thus invited, to seek beyond the visible that which is hidden and which is revealed to us only after a time of contemplation.

The technique of David Lopez brings us through the relation between forms, colors, textures, the effects of materiality and its transparency. The use of the figure of Christ, as protection, as refuge, reveals the presence of the cross as a negative.

From the contemplation of the final work a question is placed on existence. Each man looks to subsist, seeking to calm the anxieties of enduring through time. He is nourished, yet suffers, is the fisherman and the sinner, in this manner he makes his the epitaph of A. Tarkovsky, "To the one which saw an Angel".
